Arctic whalebone made a remarkable advance last week to $5.25 a pound for choice quality, says the New York World. This is the highest price remembered by the trade. Fully 10,000 pounds were sold at $4.70 to $5 a pound; and the commoner kinds, such as Japan sea and northwestern, brought $4.15 to $4.35 a pound. As with all whale products, this article is yearly diminishing in supply, and, unless commerce permits a long breading rost, it is too much to imagine that any gigantic enterprise can come with the magic aid of scientific economy and manage to organize some sort of a whale-preserve or maritime ranch at a feasible point of the ocean, our noble aquatic animal must soon practically disappear like the buffale of the prairie.

In late years a few moneyed speculators have continued to get control of filing. the bulk of the "catch." and in the LEGAL BLANKS, condition of matters all possible cheapness is wiped out. The stimulating CONTRACTS AND whips of enthusiastic jockeys and those of stylish family and road turnouts, the symmetry of comfortable corsets, of JOB PRINTING ALL KINDS. bridal or other expensive waists must bereafter pay extra tribute to the extravagant drain that has been going on in whalebone for the last sixty years.

There are many useful substitutes. but none seem to satisfactorily fill the place for best purposes of pure Greenland baleen, or as the witty dressmaker remarks: "Nothing else has such staying excellence."

Worth and a host of foreign and American gown contractors of renown are extremely particular in selecting this material, and cannot be induced to experiment with the best imitations. In fact, no first-class workman or weman would attempt to turn out a bridal, reception, or ball gown that had not an incorporation of genuine whalebone where needed.

The best whalebone is obtained from the Greenland or right whale. There are about three hundred thin plates of it in the mouth of a full grown animal, varying from ten to fifteen feet in length. These are arranged transversely in rows and fringed at the edges with a thready substance, which enables the whale to secure the at 9:00 a. m. peculiar suction food on which it sub-

Privacy in Great Cities.

Nowhere, save in the wilderness beyond the frontiers of civilization, can such perfect privacy be enjoyed as in a large city. The denizens of a busy metropolis have enough to do in attending to their own affairs. They not be called up until a motion is filed and have no time to bestow on the doings docketed by leave of the court, and such no of their neighbors and take no interest tice to the opposite party as the court may in them. The curiosity of villages order at the time leave is given to file the and small towns is inestiable. Espionage is the main employment of at least one-third of their inhabitants. On the other hand, if a stranger takes up his abode among them, he becomes a center of observation-a target for conjecture-a standing topic of conversation. - New York Ledger.

A Joke is No Joke.

Writers and censors in Russia do not see where the joke comes in, but have an altogether serious time of it. A Very High Church. Phillips Brooks was telling European travels.

"Did you climb Mont Blanc?" asked a lady of high church tendencies. "Yes," was the modest reply.

"Is it high?" pursued the lady.
"Oh, very high; but not as high as the church of the Advent," replied the eminent low churchman.
